Online Backup – Security Crucial for London Firm

A specialist provider of personal injury and human rights law services, Leigh Day & Co Solicitors based in London wanted to source an enterprise level backup provider that could protect, manage and comply with governmental regulations for its extremely sensitive client data. Having been established for well over 20 years, the respected reputation earned had to be maintained, therefore finding a provider with a similar ethos was crucial for its long term data backup strategy. After reviewing its current setup and potential future growth in data, the company decided to choose SecurStore for its Cloud Backup and Recovery Services.

// I wanted to implement a technology that could support all environments and applications for me to protect my sensitive and critical data i.e. file, email and SQL with the information to be stored in a UK data centre. I endlessly searched different softwares and providers and found the SecurStore agentless solution to be the best fit for my organisation. Their excellent and personalised 24/7 support was also a crucial factor in me choosing their offering. //

Meeting Global Security Standards

The culture change of moving data backup's offsite can be a difficult decision to make especially as tape based systems or other onsite solutions have been in use for decades with comfort levels of seeing physical disks containing data in server rooms and tapes being couriered daily offsite to secure locations still quite prominent. Technology now has changed, the global landscape has altered, therefore IT systems being labelled in that category must also move with the times.

Having round the clock knowledgeable experts gives peace of mind to customers that no matter where they are geographically based someone will be at hand to answer any issue.

Regular audits are carried out by British Standards Institute and SecurStore continues to be re-certified for the globally recognized Information Security Standard ISO 27001.
